

On the first clear day of spring, Moekin rounded the bend in the forest. The sight that greeted him was one that he had been looking forward to for a long time. It had been two years since he had laid eyes on the village of his friends the Tanners. The Halfling village was nestled in a dense part of the forest that was just outside of his hometown of Briarwood.